

There's a good chance that you've been toying with the idea of faceless YouTube.

I'm warning you that there's a distinct way to go about making it work.

My bank account used to be in the negative even though I was working a dead-end retail job.

I earned more from my bedroom last month than they were paying me in half a year.

My big break came from giving up on long-form content.

The turning point was going all in on short-form content.

Longs force you to prove yourself for a chance from the algorithm.

It requires fighting over viewership with everybody else, waiting ages to learn from your mistakes, and an obscene amount of workload each time.

This means that you're fighting for scraps, you're rarely extracting any lessons, and you're prone to burnout at some point.

Shorts give you a fair shot no matter what.

I'm talking about taking advantage of what gets overlooked, having an instant feedback loop, and putting together clips as you please.

The result is that you're no longer in a race to the bottom, you're fast-tracking the learning curve, and you're actually making use of leverage.

I'm hosting a free live masterclass where I'll be teaching everything around it.
